

Edie Diaz is a Texas native and urban affairs professional with over a decade of experience in urban community development and planning, marketing and outreach, government administration, legislative advocacy, project management, special populations and diversity, and building strong collaborations and partnerships across the public and private sector.

While working on community revitalization initiatives across Chicago and informing national efforts, Edie then naturally took to a career in public policy advocating for early childhood education. In addition, she has presented at international conferences for the U.S. Green Buildings Council, Greenbuild and taught for many years at the largest Catholic university in the country, DePaul University. For the last seven years Edie received many additional career accomplishments working for the Executive Office at one of the largest public housing authorities in the U.S., the Chicago Housing Authority.

Edie is inspired by people in community and motivated by the desire to alleviate poverty and social problems. She is committed to increasing opportunities for those living in great American cities and looks forward to being back in Texas and serving in the fantastic City of Dallas.
